FEB 1952 51-4AA

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

CLASSIFICATION

SECRET

SECURITY INFORMATION

50X1-HUM

INFORMATION REPORT

REPORT

CD NO.

COUNTRY USSR (Ukrainian SSR)

DATE DISTR.

14 Oct. 1952

SUBJECT

Conditions of Life in Panasovka, in the Kolomak Region of the Ukraine

NO. OF PAGES

1

DATE OF INFO.

NO. OF ENCLS. 1 (17 pages)

50X1-HUM

SUPPLEMENT TO

REPORT NO.

PLACE ACQUIRED

OF THE UNITED STATES, WITHIN THE MEANING OF TITLE 18, SECTIONS 793 AND 794, OF THE U.S. CODE, AS AMENDED. ITS TRANSMISSION OR REVE-LATION OF ITS CONTENTS TO OR RECEIPT BY AN UNAUTHORIZED PERSON IS PROHIBITED BY LAW, THE REPRODUCTION OF THIS FORM IS PROHIBITED.

* Not graded

THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

50X1-HUM

REFERENCE COPY DO NOT CIRCULATE

CLASSIFICATION

SECRET

STATE	х	NAVY	X.	NSRB		DISTRIBUTION	T				ı
ARMY #	х	AIR	х	FB1	X		Ì				,

Attachment

50X1-HUM

SECRET

50X1-HUM

APPENDIX "A"

50X1-HUM

CONDITIONS OF LIFE IN PANASOVKA

Index

	1.
	2. Information on village PANASOVKA 3. Occupation of inhabitants of PANASOVKA
	4. The Party and Komsomol members 5. The Village Club
. 1	6. Housing and furniture
	7. Disposal of animals owned by collective farmers
	9. Education 10. Health services
	11. Old age and sickness benefits 12. Church
:	13. Information on POKROVSKIY Syelsovyet
	15.
	16. Syelkorespondents	5024 11114
	17. Documentation 18. Employment of collective farmers on	50X1-HUM road construction
	19. Military training prior to call up	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · 20: 21.
	22. Listening to radio broadcasts.
	23. Effect of Soviet propaganda
	24. Morale of population in PANASOVKA, Attitude towards war
	25. Popularity of Soviet leaders
	26. Anti-Soviet leaflets
*.	27. 28. Soviet method of graves registration and with the Soviet and German war graves in 1	dealing ANASOVAA.
	WI OIL OILO BOTTO COMPANION COMPANIO

/2. Information

1.

-72-

SECRET

2. Information on village PANASOVKA:

PAMASOVKA belongs to the POKROVSKIY Syelsovyet which has its offices in the village of POLROVKA.

50X1-HUM

The village PANASOVA, was formed of two small villages, GLADKOVKA and PALASOVKA. The name GLADKOVKA took its origin from the name GLADKIY which was and still is the most common name in that village. Although officially both GLADKOVKA and PANASOVAA are regarded as one village and called PANASOVAA the local inhabitants use both names freely.

The railway line runs just south of PANASOVKA and the nearest railway station is KOLOHOK, which is also the seat of the district council (Rayispolkom) for KOLOMOKSKIY Rayon (District). There is a railway halt opposite PANASOVKA but only local trains stop there twice a day, once in the early morning and again in the evening.

3. Occupation of inhabitants of PANASOVKA:

The main occupation of the local population is agriculture and they all work in the local kolkhoz. Until 1950 this was called KAGANOVICH kolkhoz and had its own land, buildings and administration. In 1950 the kolkhoz ceased to be independent and was attached to kolkhoz Zdobutok Zhovtnya (which means in the Ukrainian language "Achievement of October") at POKROVKA. At the same time BUDYONNIX kolkhoz at TRUDOLUBOVKA was also attached to the kolkhoz in POKROVKA.

This reorganisation of kolkhozi made serious changes in the village life. There was no longer local administration of the kolkhoz and often the villagers were called to work far away from their homes and a lot of time was lost in walking to the place of work. The removal of the kolkhoz administration was however felt most when one wished to obtain anything from the kolkhoz as it was now necessary to walk to POKROVKA where sympathetic treatment was seldom received from the kolkhoz officials who were often strangers to PAHASOVAA people.

50X1-HUM

4. The Party and KOMSOLOL members:

There were approx eight members of the VKP(b) in PANASOVKA who usually held their own mestings approx twice per month in the kolkhoz office.

50X1-HUM

/The

-A3-

SECRET

50X1-HUM

The	Komsomol.	organisation	had	a fcw	mombers	amongst
the village	> youth

5. The Villago Caub:

A: low wooden two-roomed building housed the kolkhoz office in one room and a club in the other. The club room apart from a few wooden benches had no other furniture. The walls of the club were covered with Communist posters praising STALIN and urging everybody to do more work.

During the winter months the club was used perhaps once a month for a dance. Approx twice a year there was a cinema show in the club. The entrance fee to this show was usually 2.50 roubles. Otherwise nobody visited the club unless to find shelter when caught by rain.

50X1-HUM

People did not go to the club for two reasons, firstly there was nothing to do there and secondly if they were found there by the kolkhoz officials, who had their office in the same building, they were chased out to work.

6. Housing and furniture:

he last war. In fact the houses were one-r hich people built themselves.	50X1-I

/7. Food

-A4-

SECRET

50X1-HUM

8. Disposal of animals owned by collective farmers:

50X1-HUM

dispose of his animals only by selling them alive in the bazaar or handing them to the kolkhoz against payment.

To sell an animal in the bazaar a certificate was required from the SYELSOVYET showing that the animal was the private property of the seller. Such a certificate was sometimes issued by the kelkhoz administration and was always recognised by any concrol in the bazaar. There was no difficulty in obtaining such a certificate as the collective farmer could always say that he needed money to pay taxes and in this case the SYELSOVYET would not dare to raise any objections.

However, selling in the bazaar was not profitable as the price obtained per kg of live weight of the animal was very low and usually equalled the price of a kg of potatoes (1.50 - 2 roubles). It was much more advantageous to slaughter illegally as not only could the family themselves enjoy some meat but they could also earn a good price for meat sold to friends in small quantities. For this the collective farmer if found out, could be charged with illegal slaughter and black market activities.

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

-A5- .

SECRET

50X1-HUM

Handing the animal to the kolkhoz was considered even less profitable than selling it in the bazaar. The collective farmer never received immediate cash payment from the kolkhoz but always grain in the autimn. One kg of grain was given for one kg of meat. The amount of meat was calculated by deducting 25% from the live weight of the animal. The amount of grain was then credited to the collective farmer's account by the kolkhoz and handed out together with his earnings for "TRUDODNI" after the harvest in the autumn. As the price for grain in autumn was very low the collective farmer, who had to sell then, lost even more on the exchange. Further the grain given was not a pure grain but grain issued by the kolkhoz for "TRUDODNI" and such grain was invariably of inferior quality and poorly cleaned. However, this was not the only trouble. A collective farmer who handed his animal to the kolkhoz was regarded as "unsociable" by other collective farmers.

first priority, and the best grain, went to the State delivery, as per plan, together with any delivery above the plan (which was invariably shewn beforehand in the plan), after which a great appeal was made to the collective farmers and to their national feelings for an increase of over plan delivery (always ordered by RAYKO and often collected before the farmers approved it), next priority was grain for seed, then fodder for kolkhoz animals, then payment for animals handed to the kolkhoz 50X1-HUM by the farmers and finally the farmers themselves. Therefore, any increase of cattle in the kolkhoz and the payments made by the kolkhoz for same automatically decreased the amount of grain handed out to the farmers for the "TRUDODNT" they eafned by their work in the kolkhoz.

officially it was authorised to slaughter cattle but only on permission of a veterinary surgeon. In practice, however, the veterinary surgeon only issued such permission when an animal was sick and not expected to survive.

9. Education:

all 50X1-HUM

children were compelled to attend school from the age of seven and until they completed four classes. Only the first part of this rule was enforced and many children did not complete four classes because their parents could not clothe them in winter. No action was taken against such parents and no help was given.

/There

SECRET

-A6-

There was no school in PAMASOVKA and children from that village attended school in POKROVKA 3 km² distant. The school in POKROVKA had two rooms in which various classes had their lessons in shifts.

a new school has been	500// 11111
built in POMROVKA	50X1-HUM
"Pioneers" were required to sing songs about STALIE more often than the other children at about STALTE more often than the other children at school
	5074 11110
	50X1-HUM
	-
	* **
	:
	* .

10. Health Services:

there was no doctor in PANASOVKA. In nearby POKROVKA resided a "FYELDSHER" (dresser, doctor's assistant) and he was usually called in to any one taken ill. Only on his recommendation could one be sent to a hospital at KOLOMOK. However, to get to the hospital transport was necessary and this could only be obtained from the kolkhoz. The kolkhoz often refused to supply transport for this purpose and no one could do anything about it.

a rew persons died as a result of kolkhoz refusal to supply transport.

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

/Good

-A7-

SECRET

Good treatment and careful attention in hospital, was only received by those who were able to offer something to the doctor and the general opinion of the villagers was that without money it was no use to go to hospital.

11. Old age and Sickness Benefits:

50X1-HUM

receiving old age pension in the USSR, neither has any one receiving money from the Government or help from the kolkhoz during illness.

When old people can no longer work they are expected to be supported by their children.

Sick people are supported by their relatives and family.

The only help the kolkhoz might give in case of sickness is to issue some grain on account of "working days" (TRUDODNI") already earned.

12. Church:

50X1-HUM

village, the nearest one boing in the district town of KOLOMOK. The church was in ruins but services were held in spite of this. During the Kmas and Easter holidays crowds of people went to this church from the whole district but on those occasions the authorities usually arranged a band to play just outside the church in order to distract the attention of the worshippers and entice the young people away from the service.

In the village there was an ikon in almost every, house and the women often prayed in front of them.

Marriages as a rule were registered in the SYELSOVYET. Very few people were married in the church and there were some couples who lived together without registering their marriage.

Funerals were carried out without a priest and were attended by family and friends.

13. Information on POKROVSKIY SYELSOVYET:

50X1-HUM

POKROVSKIY SYELSOVYET consisted of three villages: POKROVKA which was the seat of the SYELSOVYET administration, PANASOVKA and TRUDOLUBOVKA.

/As

-A8-

SECRET

there were the following

50X1-HUM

officials in the SYELSOVYWE:-

The enairman (PREDSTEATYEL) who was repsonsible for administration, general brder and control of kolkhozi;

the secretary, responsible for office work, registration of population, change of address, marriages, issue of various certificates;

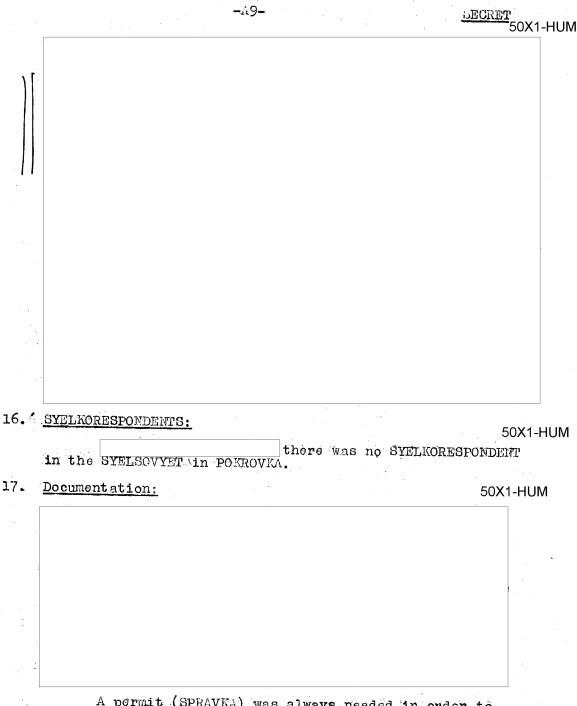

the tax collector who was responsible for collection of taxes and also acted as bailiff.

A messenger (DYESYATNIK) who was not a member of the permanent staff but a person (man or woman) detailed by the SYELSOVYET for one day in turn from every household in the SYELSOVYET. A messenger received no pay, but was relieved from work for that day by the kolkhoz (also without pay).

14. MTS:

the nearest 1.TS (Machine and Tractor Service Station) was in KOLOHOK

50X1-HUM

A permit (SPRAVKA) was always needed in order to leave the village oven when going to a bazaar. For a short journey to the bazaar such a permit was normally issued by the kolkhoz and was rather a permission to be absent from work than a permit to travel though it usually stated the purpose and destination of the journey. Many people, however, did not bother to obtain such a permit and went to the bazaar without any resultant unpleasant consequences.

/For

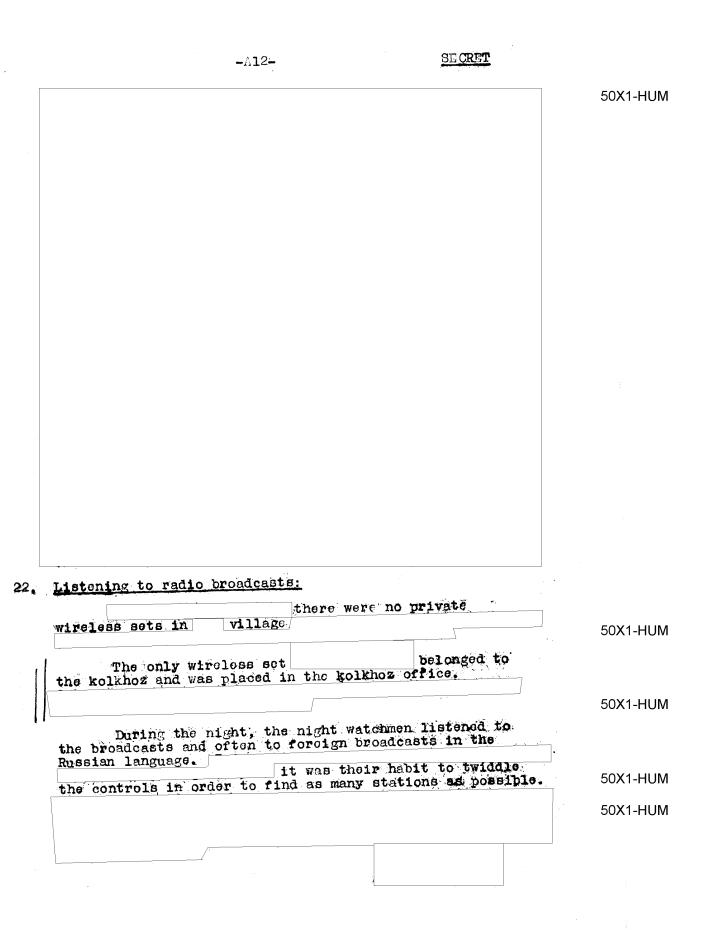

-A10-

SECRET

For a long journey a certificate (SPRLVKA) was needed from the SYELSOVYET and this was usually in the following form:
Citizen born in residing in is travelling to for the purpose of
and is due to return SYELSOVYET in Signature
사용 보통	: :
After completion of military service all men were issued with "VOYENNIYBILLT"
WOLG TORIGO WITH ACCESSIVE	50X1-HUM
Imployment of collective farmers on road construction:
a new road connecting KHARKOV with KIEV is being built and collective farmers from kolkhozi in the vicihity of this road are	50X1-HUN
conscripted to work on it. AYKOM is ordered to supply a certain number of labourers and distributes this number amongst the SYLLSOVYMTS which in turn advise each kolkhoz of the quota it must supply. The head of the kolkhoz then details the required number of men from amongst the collective farmers. Refusal to go to this work would be branded as an anti-State activity and punished accordingly. Only strong men are required and detailed for this work.	50X1-HUM
Many men were detailed to work on this road and were employed between LUBOTIN and KOLOROK, in a place called OGULTSY, where an embankment was built to carry the road over a bridge spanning the railway line.	50X1-HUN
The period for which collective farmers were required to work on road construction was from 15 days to 1 month. They received food from the authorities but never enough and they always had to supplement it.
	50X1-HUM
No accommodation was provided and the workers slept anywhere they could and in Summer often in the open.

		-All-		SECRI	T .
19.	Military traini	ng prior to ca	ll up:		•
	attend military MOLODOGO BOYTSA lasted from 5 d called up those letter delivere were instructed	training. Su was organise ays to 25 days required to a d by the SYELS	young men we ch training, d by the VOY per year.	individual lose called ur	AT .
20.
21.

/They

Effect of Soviet propaganda: there was farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper.it was rather for its paper value (as disarette paper) than for the news. There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propagands were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further club, which in any case was not patronised. Further service to ensure the job is not finished so you must work more and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist-onelavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kelkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist similvorsaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they could enjoy free time from work.		-113- S#CDBD
very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their		B:JOWIII	0X1-HUM
very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their
very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their			-
very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their
very little propaganda The collective farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cirarette paper) than for the news: There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists Service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "Khay ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed read information the celebration was finished and their senting instinguises when the celebration was finished and their		Transaction to the Section of the Se
very little propaganda farmers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper it was rather for its paper value (as cigarette paper) than for the news; There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "we are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines any propaganda on these lines any propaganda on these lines the particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was rinighed and there		Mirect of goviet propaganda:	50X1-HI IN rappers had no money to buy newspapers and when some of them did buy a newspaper. It was rather for its paper value (as cigarette paper) than for the news. There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist englavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration as fringlad and there.		there was value (as cigarette paper) than for the news. There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real entities and they are thus sam when the celebration was finished and they are the people to any they shouted "celebration only showed real entities and they are the people to any they should any they should any they should any they are they are the people to any they showed real entities any they are the		Very 11ttle propaganda / The coildeting
There was no library in the village and the only outward signs of official propaganda were posters in the club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". Any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H and little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them.		officer out a newspaper it was rather for italianna	ž.
club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished on they		value (as cigarette paper) than for the news.
club, which in any case was not patronised. Further Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished on they		There was no library in the village and the	3
Soviet propaganda had usually two themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-Had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists of calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long Live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they		Outward Signs of Official propaganda were postend in the	• themes, one "We are building communism, we have already performed miracles but the job is not finished so you must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-Had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activities work audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of varjous communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them		case was not patronised. Further must work more" and the second "You are living better than anybody else in the world so you must work more to preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist ahmiversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they		themes, one "We are building communism we have almostr	30X1-H preserve what you have got because the capitalists are doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The viltage activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only shed and there enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there		PYTE VERY UNITED STORE ON HE LINE TON THE NOT PINIONAL AS ASSESSED.
doing everything possible to take it away from you and enslave you". any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they		than anybody else in the world so you must work more and the world so you must work my better	,
any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they		ACTIONS IN THE PROPERTY OF A STATE OF A STAT
any propaganda on these lines 50X1-H had little effect because the people knew how they lived and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there		world overy villing DOSSIDIC to take it away from you and
and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there
and were not satisfied with conditions. They were not particularly afraid of capitalist enslavement because they had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there	, .	any propaganda on these lin	_{.e ន} 50X1-H
had heard how the Ukrainian workers lived in Germany during the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they	:
the war. But they saw clearly that more and more work was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there		P  * * * O U & O 4 & P . O 4 & P . O 4 O 10 C . O 20 O 10	ev was required from them. The village activists calls "dishonest people who hope through good service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they		war ward now one okrainian workang lived in Common dan	ing service to obtain personal benefits", seldom had a ready audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they			, audience and had to restrict their activities to driving the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they	L	/USILE GISHONEST Deonle who home through good	=0>44.14
the people to work, which in most cases was their job as officials of the kolkhoz administration. During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and they	1 4	Porvice to optain personal benefits" saldom had a woody
During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there	•
During official celebrations of various communist anniversaries the people took part in a meeting, obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and there	(officials of the kolkhoz administration.
obediently shouted "Long live STALIN" (in the Ukrainian language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them
language "KHAY ZHIVE STALIN"), and only showed real enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them	ŧ	THE VOI DEFIEL THE DECOME TOOK MARK IN A most in enthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them		Declently shouted Long live STATING (in the filmstrian)
onthusiasm when the celebration was finished and them		lauguage "AHAY ZHIVE STALTN") and only showed real	· ·
	5	munuslasm when the celebration was finished and thou

/With

-A14-

SECRET

With regard to the Soviet propaganda against the West some of the people having no sources of information believed what they heard but the majority were not impressed because they invariably disbelieved the Soviet propaganda. Others knew from their relatives who had worked in Germany during the war that they enjoyed better living conditions there than in the USSR. As most of the people considered war as a possibility of bringing shout a change the propagation. possibility of bringing about a change the propaganda about "warmongering "did not frighten them.

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

Morale of population in PALASOVKA. Attitude towards 24.

and increased from the Soviet point of view the morale of the population in PANASOVKA is very low. There are too many people who remember the collectivisation or suffered physically for opposing it; the village was comparatively well treated by the Germans during their occupation of the Ukraine; quite a number of younger people worked during the war in Germany and were able to relate how the Germans lived; the general low standard of life decreased after the war; the increased norms of work taxations are all reasons

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

the prevailing feeling of the population in PANASOVKA is one of apathy and resignation with the present conditions, mixed with fear that even the present low level of their standard of life may deteriorate even further. Everybody does obediently exactly what the authorities request him to do, not more, with very few exceptions and very often less when there is a good chance of not being caught.

Everybody appears to be concerned mostly with survival until the better times but nobody has any idea when they will some or who will be resoonsible for effecting a change.

50X1-HUM

nobody in the village expects any help from the Soviet Covernment and definitely does not believe that any promises from that source would be kept. As they cannot see any possibility of help from outside the Soviet Union they help themselves but this self help is restricted to pilfering of the crops in the kolkhoz and cheating the authorities.

The general belief is that better times or a change of regime can occur only through war between the USSR and another power and as the Soviet propaganda names as the chief enemies, these countries are regarded as the only ones who could oppose the USSR. It can be said that the people attach all their hopes to the war.

50X1-HUM

/25. Popularity

-A15-

SECRET

25.	Popularity	of Sovi	et leader	s:
			7 10 11 TO 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10

neither STALIN nor any other Soviet leader was popular amongst the population of the village. They held the Soviet Government responsible for their misery and they did not discriminate between the Government, the party or individual leaders.

50X1-HUM

Of the military leaders only ZHUKOV was very popular. The demobilised soldiers who had served under him told stories of how ZHUKOV never neglected an opportunity to talk to troops and always did so in an informal manner. Later when ZHUKOV was removed from the limelight and his portraits were taken down from the walls he gained in popularity as the ordinary people interpreted this as meaning that he had fallen into disfavour because he sided with thom.

26. Anti-Soviet leaflets:

50X1-HUM plane heard people in the village talking about a dropping leaflets over the fields in PANASOVKA. a number of 50X1-HUM leaflets were seen by some people in the village to have been dropped from a Soviet plane. The 50X1-HUM head of the kolkhoz sent children to collect those leaflets but the children could not find any. Next day one of the cirls found one leaflet which she handed to the head of the kolkhoz. According to rumours the text of the leaflet started with "Kill the communists" (BIY KOMUNISTOV). The head of the kolkhoz did not announce the contents of the leaflet so ______ it did 50X1-HUM contain anti-Soviet propaganda. Some time later, two men from GLADKOVKA (part of PANASOVIA) 50X1-HUM were arrested and placed in the prison in KHARKOV in Chernishovskogo street, which was regarded by all as a political prison. 50X1-HUM

27.

-A16-

SECRET

50X1-HUM

28. Soviet method of graves registration and dealing with the Soviet and German war graves in PANASOVKA:

was fought between Soviet and German troops as a result of which over one hundred Soviet soldiers were killed in the trenches. After the battle the inhabitants of the village collected all bodies into one grave which was made by enlarging a trench and covered it high with earth in the form of a small hill. No individual graves were due because it was some days before the inhabitants could approach the battlefield and by that time the bodies were in a highly decomposed state and also because the villagers thought it fitting for the soldiers to be buried in the ground they died defending.

50X1-HUM

50X1-HUM

In Summer 1945 a special commission came to the village and ordered the villagers to rebury the Soviet soldiers. The old grave was opened up and a few bones were transferred to a new small grave prepared in the village cemetery and then the old grave was levelled to the ground so that, according to the words of a major heading the commission, it would not interfere with ploughing.

/At

-A17-

SECRET

At the same time the commission discovered that there was a German grave in the village. The Soviet major then brought some sticks of high explosive with which the German grave was blown up so that "not even a trace of a German would remain on Soviet soil".

No attempt was made to identify either the Soviet soldiers or the German soldier.